BY STANDARD OIL

Alleged Pipe Line Discrimination Basis of Prosecution.

Proceedings May Within Next Few Days.

How the Standard May be Punished

Penalty for failure to file or strictly to observe tariffs, fine of $1,000 to $20,000 for each offense. Penalty for granting discriminations, fine of $1,000 to $10,000 for each offense.

In addition, the responsible officers or agents thus violating the law may be imprisoned for not more than two years.

The revelations of the peculiar opera-tions of the Standard Oil Company by the Commissioner of Corporations, indicate that the petroleum octopus will be haled into court as the first de-fendant under the new railroad rate

The disclosures will also furnish the basis for a contest in the next Congress which may result in additional legisla-tion of such character as to throw the Standard's system of pipe lines open to general use by the independent con-cerns.

Independents Frozen Out.

The investigation conducted by the Bureau of Corporations shows that the discriminations obtained from railroads. great as they have been, are of secon-dary importance to the refusal of the Standard to operate its pipe line sys-tem so as to extend its benefits to in-dependent interests.

dependent interests.

The record in the pipe line investigations has been turned over to the Department of Justice, and early action is expected. The Government expects to prove conclusively that in many instances the Standard's trunk lines have refused to file tariffs with the Interstate Commerce Commission, as required by law, and have declined to accept shipments of oil from independent concerns, except under the most impossible conditions.

Proceedings Expected Soon.

It would not be surprising if the Department of Justice should begin pro-ceedings in a few days. In this connection it is considered significant that Commissioner of Corporations Smith commissioner of Corporations Smith had his report all ready to make public more than a month ago. It was deemed advisable, however, by the Administration, to withhold its publication until the department could have time to digest those features which bore on alleged violations of the law, and could indicate what portions of the report should be eliminated before giving it to the public.

M'LAURIN FIGHTS COTTON EXCHANGE

York System of Grading.

NEW YORK, May 20 .- Former Senator John Lowndes McLaurin of South Carolina is here to take part in the prosecution of the injunction suit brought by Theodore H. Price against the New York cotton exchange to restrain the exchange from enforcing its system of grading cotton. In discussing his connection with the

In discussing his connection with the case today, Senator McLaurin said: "The Southern Cotton Association realizing after the institution of Mr. Price's suit that it was an attempt to eradicate the worst evils with which the cotton interests of the Souh have been inflicted for years, requested me to come to New York to see if they could not in some way be represented in the suit. "The methods adopted by the clique in control of the New York cotton exchange have been so successful in the past that, in their overconfidence those in control have at last raised the abuses to such magnitude that they have overreached themselves. I believe that these interests have oversold for July delivery the entire amount of spinnable cotton left in the country, and that they have done so with the sole idea of making deliveries through the New York cotton exchange of a lot of riff-raff which does not deserve the name of cotton."

true of the sailors.

Every sailor, it is true, signs to "work cargo," but he considers it a terrible imposition when he has to. eH doesn't often have to, not because he thinks it an imposition—his ideas on that point are not viewed as important—but because it is important—but because it is importantable for a crew to handle a vessel's cargo on any except a small boat.

In New York, of all places, the impossibility of handling cargo with a vessel's crew is most evident. There are several reasons for this.

Other Work for Crew

Other Work for Crew. One is that the crews are altogether inadequate in size and experience, and dock dues come too high for vessel that would be required in this way.

Another is that there is always im Another is that there is always important work for a ship's crew to do when she is in port that can be done at no other time—such as painting her hull outside for the sailors, and overhauling her boilers and engines for the men below deck if she is a steam

Finally, if the sailors had to 'work cargo' in New York, those of them who do not desert as it is—which is not many—would surely do so under that aggravation.

Stevedores Take Charge.

Tramp steamships and windjammers when they come to this port, hire some one of the many stevedore companies to take charge. The big transatlantic companies run their own stevedore ser-It comes to the same thing. Once the stevedore company takes charge the stevedore company takes charge the ship's officers and crew have nothing more to do with the hold until one cargo is out and another is in.

The first job of the stevedores is to rig the ship. That is, they have to get up the derricks and arrange the tackles for hoisting. This is a piece of work requiring considerable knowledge and experience, and necessitating taking into consideration the depth of the hold and the arrangements on the dock.

Methods of Work,

This work done, one gang is put in in charge of a "header," who directs the work. Another man is stationed at the hatchway to guide the cargo in or out and whistle signals to still another, who and whistle signals to still another, who holds the rope on the winch, and turns on and off the power. There is also a timekeeper on deck, who keeps track of the men at work for the sake of figuring up their pay, and a foreman who has charge of the entire job.

The "header" in the hold has to be one of the most capable men in the work. It is for him to direct the rest in getting out the cargo and seeing that the slings are properly put about the piles which shoot up minute after minute, so that the whole shall not come loose and fall back before it reaches the dock, with destruction to the merchandise and possible injury or loss of life for the workers. Even more difficult is his work in stowing cargo. Fish cannot be put next to beef, nor heavy machinery on top of crates of tomato cans.

Irish and Italians.

The hatchway man is also important. He must be attention all the while to get the hook started up from the hold with its load neither ahead of time no behind, and guide it safely to the dock. It is, of course, more difficult to handle a general cargo—that is, one including all sorts of merchandise—than one all of one thing. Most of the men who handle the sugar bags and flour barrels at the Brooklyn docks are Italians. The more skilled labor required for the seneral cargoes which are ians. The more skilled labor for the general cargoes which are un loaded at the Manhattan piers is largely

(From the New York Evening Post.)

The reason why a strike of the steve-dores is of such consequence to New York is that the minute a vessel comes to dock she is in their hands until she gets into the stream again. That is, she is in their hands in respect to the most important work on hand—unloading and loading her.

In port, the captain is a minor figure on board—when, indeed, he is on board, which is little of the time. The same is true of the sailors.

The players were in good spirits. Just how Navy lost the game in the last minute of play is the sole topic at the Naval Academy. The defeat is felt more keenly because of the fact that Navy had a splend!d opportunity to make clean sweep in athletics with the Army having won the football game last fall and bested the soldiers in the intercol-legiate fencing tournament in March. It will probably not be necessary for the middles to elect another captain, as Frederick T. Van Auken, of Plainfield, N. J., pitcher, will not graduate until
